Come and take a look at the new BC curriculum with an inclusive lens! How can we use these core competencies to frame our curricular planning so that we are responding to the strengths of our students rather than deficits? We will draw on frameworks to support planning for diversity in the classroom, such as universal design of learning, response to intervention and inquiry. This will help us to create both accessibility and challenge in our planning, to meet the diverse needs of ALL students in our classrooms.

Testimonials

Shelley is a passionate and inspiring presenter who engages her listeners and leaves them feeling empowered and challenged to rethink inclusion and what it means to lead and work in schools that embrace the fullness of every individual learner. ~ David O’Dell and Bill Helmus, Pacific Christian School

Shelley Moore is an amazing, engaging presenter. She IS the vision of wholeness and inclusivity. She is also very funny. I heard her speak to a group of BC school administrators and I wished all teachers could have been there. Her philosophy takes special education beyond just providing great support services for kids with exceptionalities and she talks about “real” inclusion, not just acceptance and learning “alongside” but being part of and learning “with.” She is very relevant in light of the curricular changes in BC and speaks into the interconnectedness between classroom instruction and support staff. ~ Evelyn Bouwman, Surrey Christian School

Who Should Attend

Schools are encouraged to bring teams of administrators, SE coordinators and lead teachers to focus on schoolwide initiatives. Teams will have time during the day to begin an inquiry project for their school in a chosen area related to diversity and the new BC Education Plan.
